Bukovina

Bukovina is a Romanian region situated in the northern part of Moldavia. The name Bukovina dates back to its annexation by the Hapsburgs in 1774 and it means a "land covered by beech forests". Bukovina is worth visiting, not only for its wealth of religious art and the beautiful monasteries, but also for the natural beauty and simplicity of the region. It is a territory with clean unspoiled nature. It has a unique landscape: thick forests and imposing crests ("obcine"), branching off from the Carpathians, which allow a wonderful panorama of valleys, with houses scattered here and there, with large gardens and farm yards inviting one to lie down by the haystacks and look up at the blue sky with its marvelous hues. If you want to come face to face with traditions and lifestyles which are long-gone elsewhere around the world, BUKOVINA is the place to come.
