

Activities related to 'we can do it together' on the part of the Art teacher,
Niki Roubani

- Upon organizing the venue in Athens, with permission from the school direction we created a mural with the participating students from the different countries with graffiti and small individual contributions to the theme. This served also as a focal point for the information given to the rest of the Greek students on the project.
- After our trip to Poland, there were presentations to the students on the visit and specific presentations on the issue of the Holocaust, expanding also to our neighboring Gymnasium.
- There was a mural, yet unfinished, with students working together.
- There was a self- help class for an A class group of students learning to apply active listening, empathy and support.
- We participated to the creation of a video by the students, regarding our trip to Poland.
- Discussions were encouraged for sharing. The discussions with the participating students revealed that the interaction of students from different countries and the mutual hospitality was a key factor to creating a broader perspective for our youth, of the human needs and common values and an experience valuable for overcoming worries and prejudices. The discussions were valuable for all involved, but also for their friends and peers who wanted to listen to the stories and the descriptions.
