

Last winter, at the end of the first term at school, our teachers suggested to work in pairs in order to help the classmates who were mostly in need as for some subjects, especially Maths, Latin and Greek. I personally helped one of my friends called Anastasia who was not very good at Maths. Some afternoons we met at school and did some exercises together and I helped her to do her homework, revise for tests and consolidate some difficult topics. During our Maths classes I was in charge of supporting her in taking notes and providing with further easier explanations. After this experience Anastasia has solved part of her problems in Maths improving her results in written and oral tests and on the other side I have learned to relate better with my peers and to take care of them as for school work. This experience has taught me to be less shy, more confident and generous.
