

Bulgarian Easter
traditions

Palm Sunday is known in Bulgaria as Tsvetnitsa or Vrubnitsa (Flower Day).

On this day people can eat fish.

The Orthodox Tsvetnitsa is celebrated primarily in Bulgaria and North Macedonia.

In the Bulgarian tradition of the Orthodox Church, Lent begins in Zagovezni, on the Sunday six weeks before Easter. During the 46 days of Lent, Church members don't eat all animal and fish products, including butter, cheese, milk, and caviar. On Easter Sunday, people can eat all forbidden food, for example kozunak (delicious sweet bread), symbolizing the body of Christ.

Easter eggs are dyed on Maundy
(Holy) Thursday or Holy Saturday.

The first red egg dyed on Holy Thursday is a symbol of health and good fortune for the family.

People keep it until next Easter.

On Sunday you should get up very early and go to bed only after midnight.

Otherwise, you will be lazy and you will do all the work wrong.

Holy Saturday services

begin at 11 p.m.

Families and friends go to church together, carrying their colored eggs.

When the clock strikes midnight, they greet each other with the words Hristos Vozkrese (Christ has risen).

On Easter Saturday Bulgarians bring flowers called God's bouquets to their temples.

In many ways, the celebration of Easter is similar to what we know from Poland.

Easter is very family oriented and full of colorful Easter eggs.

However, there is no tradition of pouring water on each other, Easter Monday is more like a Polish All Souls' Day, and the main color of Easter is red.
