

About Similarities and Differences

I've read this really interesting book about the life of a boy named Adrian and started comparing myself with him.

First differences - we are of the same age but he seems to be smarter and more understanding than me. He writes poems but I'm struggling even to write the first sentence of the composition. Adrian has problems at home, his mother doesn't usually listen to him.

Next, he is a boy and I am a girl – that's a huge difference. He has short brown hair and my hair is long and blond. Our style is different, but perhaps of the different time period.

One more difference – in Adrian's school children have really formal uniforms, but in our school a lot of students usually don't wear uniform. He got bullied at school, but I have never been bullied.

We have similarities as well. First, we both wear glasses. Our parents are divorced. Adrian's best friend dated his girlfriend. I was in such a situation too. He was a member of good samaritans and I've been a member of young Maltieciai - We help old and poor people. We are both kindhearted.

Adrian's life seems to be more miserable than mine.

To tell the truth, I didn't expect all these things to be written in the diary. I thought it will be about a perfect teenager with perfect life, that it will be an educational book. The book is far away from what I've expected – it shows a real teenager's life and I loved it. I think, all the teenagers should read it.

Akvile