

Motivational letter - Erasmus plus project 2021

As a young adult, and more importantly, as a student standing before my final exams, I find the topic of future jobs fascinating.

I, for one, have never had any trouble figuring out what I wanted to do for a living. Although, how that field of work will hold up in ten or twenty years and what changes might occur in the near future, are questions which need to be addressed and thought through carefully. The preparations we worked on for the Erasmus program in Budapest, gave me an insight into how technological advancement might shape different fields of work and eventually, our future.

As for the topic of the upcoming program in Italy, I believe that addressing the importance of the ever growing problem of climate change could not be a more relevant topic. Through discovering nature and the wildlife of the Alps, we will be shown a new perspective, a different insight into the impact of our consuming society. Also, meeting local people and discovering the region with them should be a very fun, and at the same time, a productive experience. Last but not least, I would also be able to practice my English and French language skills as well as learn a lot about Italian culture and history.

During various school projects, I have taken part in many collaborations and team works. Given my interest in design and fine arts, I mostly like working on the visuals, and planning the structure of our work. I have been in the team leader position more than once. In some projects we have succeeded, in others, we have not. On that note, I genuinely believe that the experience of failing is just as important, if not even more so, than reaching success. I was able to take away so much from failing, and I also learned from my mistakes. I guess the saying that participation is more important than winning, is true in every sense. What is important for us now, is to learn how to work together, even if the people whom we are working with are practically strangers. We can learn something from each other, no matter what. This is why I would like to participate in this year's Erasmus trip.

Lastly, working in a team, I am seen as hardworking and punctual. I hold myself to the deadlines and I consider myself an extroverted person, who can work quite well with all kinds of people. I love to hear others' point of views and participate in debates, to test our different opinions in different subjects.

To conclude my thoughts, I firmly believe that the Erasmus plus project is an excellent opportunity for me to broaden my views, learn a lot, and help me grow as an individual as well.
