Joe Biden announced this week «the cessation of support for offensive operations in Yemen» Is this a step towards the end of the «secret war» in which the United States participates? Why does this foreign policy measure matter to the world?

Yemen, a country with 24 million people, has 80% of them in a critical humanitarian situation. In 2018, an average of 505 people died every day. Currently, they're still going through the worst famine in the world, with pandemic rates much more deadly than COVID 19, as was the case with cholera, mainly due to the destruction of sanitation and sewerage infrastructure. But, what is behind all this?

The conflict has its roots in the Arab Spring of 2011, when an uprising forced the country's authoritarian president, Abdullah Saleh, to hand over power to his vice president, Mansour Hadi. Although it was expected that the political transition would bring

Inspiring people around me

My sister is the closest person around me and she is a fantastic source of continuous inspiration. His studies, personal trajectory, and moral toughness make him a very bright person.

For a few months, she has been writing on an information platform, articles related to international issues (empowerment of women, emigrants, political systems) ... etc. Among other things.

She is a person who teaches me every day to improve myself, with his help.
