

Children's rights

EVERY CHILD DESERVES RIGHTS

We all have many rights in society, from early age to adults. Even when these rights increase, they seem to diminish, as we may stop worrying about it, we think they are details or we will not go further. But what about the child who is unaware of most of his rights? Do you know what a child's rights are?

One thing every child deserves is a good education, another very important thing is to have access to culture and the means of communication and information, like Internet for example, socialize with others, children need to have friends and talk with others, children can't work like an adult, children need to have a good nutrition for them to grow healthy. They have also the right to receive free medical assistance in public hospitals whenever they need assistance; be free to come and go, live in society and express ideas and feelings; having the protection of a family whether natural or adoptive, if parents and closest relatives are lost; do not suffer physical or psychological aggression from those who are in charge of protection and education or any other adult.

Children have the right to be benefited by rights, without any discrimination by race, colour, sex, language, religion, country of origin, social class or wealth and every child in the world must have his rights respected. Children have the right to a name and a nationality from their birth, that is be a citizen of a country.

Unfortunately these rights are not always respected. This is especially true in the poorest countries, where children live in very bad conditions. Adults sometimes instead of protecting and safeguarding children, mistreat and exploit them, thus becoming their worst enemies.

Some people don't understand that children and teenagers are the future of the world, they will be future parents and grandparents.

These are all the rights every child needs to have. If we want for the next generation and the one after that to be smart and expand in life, these rights are essential to help every child to build his own life correctly.

So take care of a child or a grandchild because they are our wealth.
