Practicing Interpersonal Relationships through a workshop on orienteering younger students

Class 5- Tutor Maria Antonietta Battaglia- 20th December 2019

Success in own’s school orienteering usually requires a balance of curricula-specific knowledge and skills related to interpersonal relationships. Our institute decided to entrust students with this task. Teachers acted only as facilitators, so our students improved their soft skills both with the members of the management team and with younger students by trying to persuade them to attend our Institute.

After a brief introduction of our school offer

They let them visit the school's labs

and showed them some devices

Then they answered their questions

It was a great opportunity for our students to improve their interpersonal relationship skills. They realized that they should not limit themselves to practice them with friends of the same age and that to facilitate good relationships, interpersonal relationship skills include being a good listener and communicating clearly.

It seems it was a success!!!!
