

The Myth of Return - Europeana Foundation, Europe - Copyright Not Evaluated.

https://www.europeana.eu/es/item/2084002/contributions_d5be9570_6424_0137_a04d_6eee0af6e166

My grandma always tells me how she used to go to the swimming pool or to the river with her children. They took their food and made a big picnic, they carried beach chairs like that one in the photo and the common little fridge, and lots and lots of food. My mom has lots of beautiful memories of that age, she enjoyed going to the trip singing the song “Nos vamos de excursión” in Spanish and having such a good time with her siblings swimming, she told me that many people enjoyed their summers that way.

The summers in Spain were enjoyed like this, but they also did a lot of other activities. Spain is a Mediterranean country, which means that summer was very hot here and that almost everyone loved it. Our families would go to the beach, enjoy their time with their friends and family. They would also sit in a table in the shade and play the spanish cards, which was a lot of fun. Ice cream was eaten almost every day as dessert, markets would be held on weekends mostly, families would read the daily news on printed newspapers, and everyone would enjoy their days.