

The sneakers I wear the most are my new ones Nike AirMax 2090. As the label on them says, they were made in China and to be honest I am a bit surprised because I thought Nike only makes their sneakers in Indonesia or Cambodia. I have recently bought them at a Nike store in Osijek, Croatia. The price I got them for is 160 euros and I must admit they are a bit pricey but I don't buy sneakers that often so I would say it's okay. I buy new sneakers only when I need a new pair, and that doesn't happen often so I would say I buy them once in every two years. I try to get the most out of my sneakers before I throw them away, or if I grow out of them, my mother gives them away to her friend's kids. What I look for the most when buying new sneakers is that they have to look good but also they have to be comfortable. As I said, they were produced in China and have been transported to Europe by ship. I don't know how much the workers in those factories where they produced them are payed, but from all the stories I've heard, they are being underpaid and definitely deserve more than they get currently. Unfortunately, us customers (especially the ones who live so far away) can't do anything about it other than choose the products that we know that they have been manufactured without exploitation.
