

A day without electricity

Electric current is a necessity in our lives for some time. The activities we practice daily are related to electricity, and we are accustomed to living in this way.

On this Sunday, I left all these habits of electricity and I enjoyed a day without electricity. I woke up around eight o'clock in the morning and I won against the impulse to open my phone as usual. After I did my morning routine and taking my breakfast, I talked to my parents about what we are going to do today, informing them about my day detached from the electricity world. We decided to go to some family friends who we haven't visited for a long time. Because the road was not short, we went by car. We left the phones at home and we were glad to see that those friends were at home because we had no way of telling them we were coming. During the visit we talked, we laughed and played society games, all these without electricity. At about four o'clock p.m., we decided to go home, because arriving it's getting dark. Getting home, we stayed for a while, we ate, and as soon as the darkness came out, we slept.

It was an exciting and different day and I was glad to have experienced this lifestyle.
