

1. Introduction

This project has exceeded our expectations. During the days we've been in Greece we had fun, learned about Greek culture, the importance of recycling and reusing, how can we prevent each kind of contaminant which affects our air, and especially, how team work between people from different countries can be educational and unifying.

2. The project's impact

From now on, old clothes won't be considered "trash" anymore. In the past, I would have thrown away my antique costumes, but now, I will think about reusing them to create boxes made of cloth.

Also I have learned about the importance of avoiding fuel motor transport. When we check the air contaminants high near roads, in order to reduce these contaminants, I will use no-contaminant transports (Bikes, Skates or walking by our own foot) whenever it's possible.

Our Greek mates were specialists in Air conditioning technologies, they explained to us the importance of choosing good air conditioning in order to limit the contaminants they can generate or their electrical use.

Last but not least, we learned how our residues affect to nature, how can we recycle them and how does a recycling plant works

3. Our national/International relationships.

The mobility allowed me to learn from each other, even as we experimented an increasing confidence between the Spanish team while we were performing the different activities.

I have learned many interesting things from Greece's culture, which helped me to understand them deeper, creating a nice friendship between all of us.

I think in a project like this, activities like going to a museum or doing tours along the city affects our performance, increasing our effectiveness because of the increasing confidence between the group.

During the project, I felt like an European citizen (not just Spanish citizen). I was in a new country with a different culture, but I felt at home, I learned how to communicate (even with some greek words), and felt comfortable.

Some months after the mobility, we keep in contact with our greek mates, and all we hope is to have again the possibility to repeat this wonderful experience which is a Erasmus Mobility.

4. Public Representation of Work

Teachers organize us in order to perform the different activities, but they give us the freedom to reorganize as we prefer in order to have better effectiveness.

It has been a nice experience working side by side with our bulgarian and Greek mates.

5. Conclusion

It has been a nice experience for me, which I wish to have the opportunity to repeat some day. Moving to another country and working with people from different countries has been so educational for me.

Also I had the opportunity to improve my English, which is always nice and, naturally, I've been able to make new friendships from Greek.
