

FAKE STORY

Slovenian students got infected with the coronavirus on a trip?

It happened on Monday; a group of Slovenian students and teachers were in Venice. Because they were not wearing masks, they got infected with the coronavirus. At the airport in Barcelona two doctors measured their temperature. They discovered that they had got the virus. They were very worried because the doctors in Venice were totally different. They went to quarantine. They sum up their experience: "I will never visit Venice again, I hate coronavirus." So, they will visit Spain again, but they will never travel from Venice.

Hana and Evelin from Slovenia

TRUE STORY

The day we visited Barcelona we saw a lot of important statues. We saw an old aqueduct built during the Roman Times and two iron "bars" which represented the entrance into the area inside the wall. We also walked down the main street (we forgot what it is called) and the tour guide explained there had been a river canal in the Middle Ages. The tour guide showed us a beautiful work of art made of tiles. Every single tile had a picture on it. These pictures were brought by many people. One of the donators was Shakira, a very famous and popular singer. When you look at the work of art from a distance, you see two people biting their lips.

Neli and Neža from Slovenia