

I had the privilege of participating in two mobilities, in Greece and Finland. This project allowed me to discover new cultures, lifestyles, new people ... It has brought me a lot, both socially and linguistically. For the future, I think these mobilities have allowed me to be more open to others, more open-minded and to perfect my English interaction with other people who do not speak French. Thanks to the Erasmus project, I looked at migration in a different way. Migration can be a personal choice or a "forced choice." With our work I have discovered the difficulties faced by those who leave their country. The exchanges between the different countries led me to stop giving in to ready-made ideas. I would like to share two memories among many others! First, the touching testimony of a Syrian teenager who had told us about her journey. Thanks to his courage we were able to learn a lot about his experience. Then, all the good times spent with partners from all countries in a less formal setting. We exchanged a lot about how we see migration, the world, and so many other things!
