History:

Until 1993 the area was used as a military training ground for British troops. Today the military training site is a nature reserve.

Today's nature reserve:

1953-1990: tank driving ground and training area for the British army had its roots pushed up by the tanks neither biocides nor fertilizers were used here during the past 60 years high biodiversity is highly structured

Senne

---

- Heather surfaces are not natural landscapes but rather remains of former farming activities
- After the clearing of the original oak-birch forest developed the heath farming industry
- More nutrients were taken than introduced
- Until about 1950, the old heathland was swept by the farmers in the nature conservation area
- Heather surfaces are abandoned fields > rectangular and very flat
- Problems: Burying, High Grass, Disturbing plants
- Is solved by sheep weaving, sometimes machine positioning

Bega

- Nearby is the castle of Brake, built in the style of the Weser renaissance and the local mill museum
- Years ago there was a swimming pool
- In 1969 they built some train rails which were closed and rebuilt in 1980 in another place
- Only the nobles had the right to own a plantation
